Romance of the Tomb. In the year 1400, Genevra de Amiera, a Florentins beauty, married, under paternal pressure, a man who had failed to win her heart, which she had given to Antonio Rondinelli. Soon afterward the plague broke out in Florence; Genevra feli ill, apparently succumbed ito the mulady, and being pronounced dead, was the same day consigned to the family temb.

Some one, however, had blundered in Some one, however, had blundered in the matter, for in the middle of the night, the entombed bride woke out of her trance, and badly as her living relatives had behaved, found her dead ones still less to her liking, and lost no time in quitting the silent company apon whose quietnde she had unwillingly intraded. Speeding through the sleep-wrapped streets as fast as her clinging cerements allowed, Genevra sought the home from which she had so istely been home. accounted for! home from which see home, deen loome.

Roused from his slumbers by a knocking at the door, the disconsolate widower of a day cautionally opened an upper waindow, and seeing a shrouded figure waing below, in whose upturned face he recognized the lineaments of the dear departed, he cried, "Go in peace, bleased sprit," and shut the window precipitately. With sinking heart and slackened step, the repulsed wife made her way to her father's door, to receive the like henison from her dismayed parent.

Then she crawled on to an uncle's whore the door was indeed opened, but only to be alammed in her face by the frightened man, who, in his hurry, forgot even to bless his ghoatly caller. The inghtened man, who, in his hurry, for-got even to bless his ghostly caller. The cool night air penetrating the undress of the hapless wanderer, made her tremble and shiver, as she thought she had waked to life only to die in the cruel streets. "Ah," she sighed, "Antonio would not have proven so unkind." This thought naturally suggested that it was her duty to test his love and cour-age: it would be time enough to die if he proved like the rest. The way was he proved like the rest. The way was soon Genevra was knocking timidly at Rondinelli's door. He opened it him-self, and although shriled by the ghast-ly vision, calmly inquired what the spirit wanted with him.

Throwing the shroud away from her the Genevra exclaimed: "I am no spirit, Antonio, I am that Genevra you once loved, who was buried yesterday—buried alice! and fell senseless into the welcom-ing arms of her astonished and delighted ing arms of her astonished and delighted lever, whose cries for help soon brought down his sympathising family to hear the wondrous story, and to bear its hero-ine to bed, to be tenderly tended intil she had recovered from the sheek, and their time.—[Chambers' Journal.

Then came the difficulty. Was General to return to the man who had buried her, and shut his doore against her, or give herself to the man who had saved her from a second death? With such powerful special pleaders as love and gratitude on his side, of course, Rondimelli won the day, and a private marriage made the lovers amends for previous disappointments.

They, however, had no intention of keeping in hiding, but the very first Sunday after their marriage, appeared in public together at the Cathedral, to the confusion and wonder of Genevra's friends. An explanation ensued which satisfied everybody but the lady's first husband, who insisted that nothing but her dying in genuine carnest could dissolve the original matrimonial bonds.

These saw as referred to the bishop, who, having no precedent to curb his decision, rose superior to technicalities, and declared that the first husband had

An Astonishing Fix. old Mr. Mugride, who has a cottage up at Shadynook, invited a few of his friends to go up and stay awhile and en-joy the country air. As they were all ound of good beer, he sent up a keg of found of good beer, he sent up a keg of new ale to be put in the cellar, and kept until his arrival. Saturday afternoon he and his friends went up. After opening the parlors and making things comfortable, he thought a little beer wouldn't go bad: so taking his gimlet and lantern, he went down to fill the flowing bowl.
Arrived in the cellar, he found that the keg was leaking through an old veut, so getting his lantern down he commenced getting his lantern down, he commenced to tap it, putting one of his thumbs over the leak; but finding that the light wasn't good where the lantern set, he took the handle of it in his mouth and continued boring. Pretty soon the gim-let went through, and the beer came out let went through, and the beer came out whizzing; and as he had neglected to make a plug, he had to put his other thumb over it. He had the beer all snug enough, but discovered that he himself was in a fix—he must either stay or lose the beer. His mouth being in use, prevented his calling anybody. He turned his head to the left, then to the right, and then he would drop it in a deright.

turned his head to the left, then to the right, and then he would drop it in a devotional manner, and make a noise between a smort and a grow!

About this time he began to feel something damp under him, and found, by investigating, that he was sitting in a pan of soft soap. Above him he could hear his friends enjoying themselves in the parlor, playing the piano, and his daughter singing "Father, dear Father, come home with me now," followed by come home with me new," followed by "Thou art so near, and yet so far." His laws began to ache holding the lantern, and the drool was running out of each corner of his mouth, which made him hearly frantic. His feet and legs sched. too, from the cramped position he was in, and he had desided to let the bear slide, when he heard footsteps approach, which silde, when he heard footsteps approach, which proved to be the servant girl coming down for coal. As soon as she caught sight of him, she dropped the coal hod, which fell into a tub containing a nest of pet kittens, killing three of them, and causing the old cat to light out up the stairs, landing in a pan behind the stove. The loss of his pets made the old man so irate as to drop his innern and rehearse that part of the dictionary which is left out. After scraping off the soap as well as he could, he wended his way up the lisest stairs to his room, and changed his raiment. Returning to the parlor, he told his friends that he had been out to see a man.—

THE MORALS OF WALL STREET. - A The Morale of Wash Street. A well known and most widely advertised banking house in Wall street, hitherto priding itself upon its eminent respectability and gilt-edged character, which suspended during the late panic, less than twenty-four hours before the suspension, received among its deposits one of ave thousand dollars, made by a party who was engaged in daily cash purchases for his Southern business, and shipping the same as fast as possible. The tying up of this money has worked most serious injury to the party, not only stopping all his transactions in the city, but dee ply embarmaning him in his Southern connection. But what of the moral calibre of a "leading" New York banking house that would descend to such base tricks? They had arranged to stop; and knowing that on the morrow their suppension would take place, to day they accept cash deposits, which they are aware they are not to return when called for. But this is not all. After transactions such as we have noted, the partners of this house, with the cheek of highwaymen, actually ask the public to waive the collection of debts and deposits due them at present, and to renew business, bringing on more cash, which this time, they say, shall be properly accounted for!
